Women’s stories (names changed to protect privacy)

Evaluna, a migrant woman whose right to abortion was denied

Women’s Link represents Evaluna, a migrant woman who was entitled to an abortion in Colombia but couldn’t access it because service providers and judges denied her the health service. Click here for more information.

Evaluna is available for a limited number of interviews. She is a Spanish speaker.

Camila, health providers used her mental health condition to deny her an abortion

Women’s Link Worldwide represents Camila, a young woman who had the right to an abortion under Colombian laws, but it was denied to her. Instead of providing the abortion, the health providers forcibly admitted her to a psychiatric clinic for 15 days, during which time she remained sedated and tied to the bed. Click here for more information.

Camila is available for interviews with a limited number of journalists. She is a Spanish speaker.

Other impacted women’s stories, including migrant women and girls

Women’s Link Worldwide also has stories from women, including Venezuelan migrants, who live in regions outside Colombia’s largest cities, which illustrate the significant barriers to accessing abortion for women and girls facing multiple inequalities.